Gramps and Lily spend many happy days together, riding Little Blossom through the countryside. They go on picnics, explore the woods, and even help out on the farm. But one day, Gramps falls ill and is unable to ride Little Blossom anymore. Lily is heartbroken, but she knows that she must take care of her grandfather. She continues to visit Gramps every day and tell him stories about her adventures with Little Blossom.

One day, Gramps asks Lily to bring Little Blossom to him. He wants to see his old friend one last time. Lily is reluctant at first, but she knows that it would make her grandfather happy. She brings Little Blossom to Gramps' bedside, and the two old friends have a tearful reunion.

Gramps tells Lily that he is proud of her and that he knows she will always take good care of Little Blossom. He then closes his eyes and dies peacefully. Lily is heartbroken, but she knows that her grandfather is in a better place. She continues to ride Little Blossom every day, and she always thinks of her grandfather when she does.
